Children's Medical Center Health & Safety Tip of the Week

While Classes Are Out, Keep Good Nutrition In

School is out, but good nutrition doesn't have to be. With an abundance of free time and growing appetites, young children are more likely to gain weight during the summer than during the school year. Just as mealtimes are scheduled during the school year, set the meal agenda for the summer. During the days, make sure that water and healthy snacks like fruits, vegetables and low-fat yogurt are always available. Structure your children's days so that their time watching television is limited, and encourage them to exercise. For more tips on staying healthy this summer, visit childrens.com.
