Children's Medical Center Health & Safety Tip of the Week

Help Your Young Athlete Prevent Sports Injuries

As the temperature rises, so do kids' activity levels - and that can sometimes lead to injuries. Sports medicine specialists at Children's Medical Center say getting a proper medical screening before becoming involved in any athletic activity is key. When the temperature is hotter than 70 degrees, make sure your kids take a 5- to 10-minute rest and a fluid break after 25 to 30 minutes of activity. Your young athletes should use the right equipment, including sports-specific footwear. It should fit properly and be checked routinely for wear and tear.
